Jane's childhood has been full of struggles and hardships. She lives with her abusive and cruel aunt, Mrs Reed. One day, her aunt locks her up in the 'red room' where her Uncle Reed died. This serves as a traumatic experience for Jane and she is eventually sent to Lowood school.

However, her experience there is also far from relaxing. A headmaster is a corrupt man who starves the children and uses the school funds for his personal gains. The school faces an epidemic where many students pass away and thus arrives a new headmaster. Things get better after that and Jane completes her education and also teaches there for two years.

Next, she moves to Thornfield to work as a governess. Mr Rochester is Jane's employer, with whom Jane starts falling in love. A fire breaks out at the manor and Jane saves Mr Rochester.

She starts suspecting things because they blame a servant, Grace, for it, but do not fire her. Finally, Mr Rochester proposes to Jane and she accepts. But, she learns at the altar that Mr Rochester has a wife, the same one who tried to set the house on fire.

Upon learning this, Jane leaves Mr Rochester, refusing to marry a married man.

Then, she rebuilds her life from scratch with the help of three siblings, Mary, Diana and St. John. They turn out to be her cousins.

St. John also proposes to Jane but she declines as she is not in love with him. Upon realizing she still loves Mr Rochester, she goes back to Thornfield to witness the house has been burned down.
